FOOT & MOUTH DISEASE

Information and guidelines for members to help protect landowners and hunting venues...

Background: These are the points to keep in mind with regards to the risk of spreading Foot and Mouth Disease (FMD).

The FMD virus is a very hardy virus that can survive outside of cattle for extended periods. As a result, people and equipment that has been contaminated with FMD virus can easily spread the virus from one farm to the next.

Even the suspicion that hunters have contributed to the spread of FMD will be enough for farmers to deny hunters access to a farm. Hunters must not enter any farms that are under quarantine for FMD.

They need to comply with all biosecurity measured that farmers have put in place on their farms. Hunters must preferably not enter multiple farms that have cattle on a single day.

Hunters need to, as much as possible, stay away from areas of the farm where cattle are kept. This includes driving through, or walking through, camps where cattle are kept.

The hunters must not interact with any cattle on the farms they visit. This is to lower the risk of the hunter's clothes, equipment and vehicles being contaminated with FMD virus.

Foot-and-mouth disease (FMD) is taken very seriously in South Africa, and hunters can play a big role in limiting its spread if they follow strict biosecurity practices when moving between farms. Here's a clear, practical guide...

How hunters can help limit the spread of FMD:

1. Hunt only on authorised farms

- Ensure the farm is outside an FMD control zone or that you have written permission and any required permits from veterinary authorities.
- Respect farm movement controls – if the farmer says no access, don't push it.

2. Limit farm-to-farm movement

- Avoid hunting on multiple farms in a short period, especially in different districts.
- If possible, schedule hunts so you move from low-risk areas to higher-risk areas, not the other way around.

3. Clean and disinfect before and after every hunt

FMD virus spreads easily via:

- Boots
- Tyres
- Clothing
- Knives and equipment

Anything that has contacted soil, manure, blood, or animal tissue must be treated as contaminated.

Disinfectants that are effective against FMD

The FMD virus is tough, but it is vulnerable to certain disinfectants when surfaces are properly cleaned first.

Effective disinfectants include:

- Virkon S (1% solution) – widely recommended and practical;
- F10;
- Sodium carbonate (washing soda) ;
- Household bleach (sodium hypochlorite) at 2-3% available chlorine.

(Note: bleach is quickly inactivated by dirt and organic matter).

Always remove visible dirt, blood, and manure before applying disinfectant. (disinfectant alone will not work on dirty surfaces).

Practical precautions for hunters

Boots and footwear

- Scrub boots with water and detergent to remove all dirt;
- Disinfect using a footbath or spray;
- Allow proper contact time (at least 10 minutes where possible).

Clothing

- Wear washable hunting clothes
- Wash at 60°C or higher;
- Avoid moving dirty clothing between farms.

Vehicles and trailers

- Pay attention to tyres, wheel arches, and footwells;
- Remove mud and organic matter first
- Spray or wash with approved disinfectant.

Knives, tools, and equipment

- Clean thoroughly with hot water and detergent;
- Disinfect after use;
- Keep equipment dedicated to a single farm where possible.

Carcasses and meat handling

- Follow the farmer's instructions strictly
- Do not move carcasses or raw meat off the farm unless legally permitted
- Clean and disinfect hands, knives, and surfaces after handling animals

Personal responsibility and awareness

- Do not hunt if you have recently visited another farm, feedlot, auction, or abattoir without adequate cleaning and disinfection.
- Report any animals showing signs such as excessive salivation, lameness, or mouth/foot lesions to the farmer immediately.
- Keep records of farms visited, especially during outbreak periods.

In short

Hunters help protect South Africa's livestock industry by:

- Respecting control zones and farm rules;
- Cleaning first, disinfecting properly, every time;
- Limiting unnecessary movement between farms;
- Staying alert and reporting suspicious symptoms.

– With thanks to Dr Charles Gilfillan BSc (Agric) BVSc (Hons) | Technical Services Manager: Health | Animal Nutrition and Health, Sub-Sahara Africa – Kemin South Africa.
